Ayhan Karakas, Sadık Serçek

Bartın University Faculty of Economics and Administrative Sciences

In the information age we experience, organizations have comprehended that the weight of human resources cannot be ignored in the innovation and the promotion of change in businesses. Employees sometimes can express their opinions on some internal organizational matters while, at other times, they can keep them for themselves for a variety of reasons. This research is conducted to examine the impact of religious attitude of hotel employees on organization silence. In addition, it is researched whether the degree of organizational silence and religious attitudes differentiate with regard to demographic variables. For this purpose, a questionnaire is applied to 350 employees who work in hotel enterprises and are determined through convenience sampling in Antalya, İstanbul and Diyarbakır. The data obtained through questionnaire is analysed via T test, ANOVA, correlation analysis, regression analysis and confirmatory factor analysis. As a result of research, it was determined that religious attitudes have an impact on organizational silence. One of the reasons that keep employees silent is that they do not trust the manager. Therefore, managers should listen the ideas of employees with respect; otherwise new ideas will not emerge in the enterprises. In the conclusion, some suggestions are presented for managers in hotel enterprises and researches who studying in this field.
